Call for Papers

In this digital age, boundaries between various fields are becoming increasingly blurred. Education and communication are no longer confined to traditional classroom settings or face-to-face interactions. With the advent of the internet and various digital platforms, individuals can access information and connect with others from anywhere in the world. These developments have had profound implications for education, communication, and society as a whole. The HKAECT International Conference 2024 aims to explore the ways in which innovative digital technologies have transformed education and communication, and how they continue to shape our world.

We cordially invite presentation proposals (500 words) and full papers (10-20 pages) that explore the following topics, but are not limited to:

- ✓ The impact of digital technologies on education, including online learning, blended learning, and MOOCs
- ✓ The role of digital technologies in communication, including social media, digital journalism, and virtual communities
- ✓ The challenges and opportunities of digital technologies for marginalized groups, including people with disabilities, those living in rural areas, and low-income communities
- ✓ The ethical, legal, and social implications of digital technologies, including issues related to privacy, security, and surveillance
- ✓ The potential of digital technologies and a wide range of teaching pedagogies in promoting social change, including activism, civic engagement, and political participation

We encourage submissions from scholars and researchers in various fields, including education, communication, social sciences, and humanities. We welcome both theoretical and empirical papers, as well as case studies, policy analyses, and critical reviews.
